Dear Policymaker:

As you know, the number and type of medical cannabis businesses are rapidly increasing in Colorado in response to a strong demand from medical cannabis patients to have safe, reliable access to their medicine. Many communities are starting to develop regulations regarding medical cannabis businesses. The attached report, Encouraging the Economic Development of Medical Cannabis Businesses in Colorado, was written to give background and clarity to the issue and to provide a framework that can be used to regulate and foster cannabis business development in your community.

Cannabis medicine is an entirely new industry in the state and represents a unique opportunity for local officials to improve their economies by welcoming these businesses to their communities and encouraging their efforts to provide safe, reasonable access to legal patients. Just as Colorado is at the forefront of developing other "green" technologies, we would like to see the state embrace this new green economy for the benefit of all its citizens.

When designing new policies and regulations, it is critical to remember that this is a health care issue, affecting the lives of thousands of sick people who have all been qualified by their physicians and the State of Colorado to use cannabis as medicine. A proactive public health model can effectively address problems before they arise, and communities can design methods for safe, legal access to medical cannabis while keeping the patients' needs foremost.

The Cannabis Therapy Institute is composed of patients, caregivers and advocates in Colorado's medical cannabis community who want to ensure that any regulation keeps the patients' best interests in mind. Our regulatory framework will encourage cannabis businesses in your community by clarifying existing regulations and thereby helping provide legal protection from federal law. There are several different organizational models that caregivers are currently using to provide medicine to their patients, and none of them are currently defined in Colorado law. Our goal is to develop continuity across the state by coming up with a consistent model to implement Article XVIII, Section 14 of the Colorado Constitution and ensure patients have safe, consistent access to quality, affordable medicine.

This report is a living document. Please email all your feedback on it to:

A report by the Cannabis Therapy Institute

I. History of Cannabis Medicine

Cannabis has been used as medicine by humans safely for over 10,000 years with not one death from an overdose. It was one of the most widely-prescribed medicines in the late 1800's and early 1900's until it was made illegal in 1937. It is an effective treatment for nausea, muscle spasms, glaucoma, seizures, severe chronic pain and many more conditions. There is no other medicine that treats so many conditions as effectively with so few negative side effects.

Cannabis was outlawed in 1937 due to interests in the pharmaceutical, petrochemical and timber companies who saw cannabis and hemp as competition. Cannabis was a medicine that people could grow in their backyards and that couldn't be patented, so pharmaceutical companies couldn't profit from it. In addition, non-psychoactive cannabis (industrial hemp) was seen as a threat to petrochemical and timber industries because it has so many commercial uses including, plastics, fuel, and paper. In the 1920's, hemp was becoming the basis for a new farm-based green economy. Henry Ford even built one of his first cars out of hemp.

II. Terminology: Cannabis vs. Marijuana

The term "marijuana" is a racist term invented in the 1920's "Reefer Madness" propaganda campaign to outlaw cannabis and hemp. The campaign was designed to make the public believe that cannabis was a "new drug" being used by Mexicans who were coming across the border to rape white women.

Cannabis is the name of the genus of the plant, which includes Cannabis sativa, Cannabis indica and other species and strains. Cannabis is the proper term for the medicine and is how the medicine was listed in the U.S. pharmacopeia from 1870 to 1941. Since most laws regarding cannabis were written after 1937, they use the word "marijuana" or "marihuana". We encourage everyone to use the proper term "cannabis" whenever possible to show sensitivity to the use of racist, offensive words.

III. Legal Background

Article XVIII, Section 14 of the Colorado Constitution (Colorado's Medical Marijuana Amendment) was adopted by voters in 2000 to allow patients with certain debilitating medical conditions to use cannabis as medicine. The Medical Marijuana Amendment provides an exemption from state law for patients if they cultivate up to 6 plants or possess up to 2 ounces of cannabis medicine. For amounts greater than this, the Amendment allows a patient to present an affirmative defense in court that these amounts were medically necessary.

If a patient cannot obtain the medicine for themselves, the Amendment allows patients to appoint a "primary caregiver" to obtain or cultivate the medicine for them. Most patients cannot provide their own medicine. Often, their illnesses make even the most common daily tasks very difficult. Cannabis cultivation is expensive, time-consuming, and requires expert knowledge that most patients don't have. So patients must rely on caregivers to provide them with medicine.

In July, the Colorado Board of Health and Environment clarified the issue by adopting rules which state that a caregiver's "significant responsibility" could mean simply providing a patient with medical marijuana. Since that decision, many businesses and collectives have started to serve the needs of the growing number of legal patients in Colorado. The issue for communities should not be how to curtail this activity, but rather how to capitalize on this new economic boom to benefit their patients as well as their community.

In adopting policies and regulations concerning medical cannabis businesses, it is important to remember that medical cannabis is a Constitutional right for Colorado citizens, the same as freedom of speech, freedom of religion and freedom of elections. Policymakers have a duty to uphold the Constitution and ensure that citizens can exercise their Constitutional right in a safe manner.

Federal Law

Medical cannabis is not protected under federal law. However, the Obama administration's new policy on medical cannabis says that the federal government will not enforce federal law in states with medical marijuana laws, as long as medical cannabis businesses are complying with all state and local laws. That is one reason why it is urgent to clarify state and local laws: so that cannabis-related businesses can be assured that they will not be targeted by federal law enforcement.

IV. Medical Cannabis Economic Development

Medical cannabis caregiver businesses benefit local businesses

A 2006 Report by Americans for Safe Access (ASA) in California¹ showed that medical cannabis businesses are typically positive additions to the neighborhoods in which they locate, bringing additional customers to neighboring businesses and reducing crime in the immediate area. Like any new business that serves a different customer base than the existing businesses in the area, medical cannabis businesses increase the revenue of other businesses in the surrounding area simply because new people are coming to access services, increasing foot traffic past other establishments. In many communities, the opening of a medical cannabis business has helped revitalize an area.

Medical cannabis caregiver businesses decrease crime

The ASA Report also showed that medical cannabis businesses in the neighborhood actually tend to decrease crime, not increase it. Without medical cannabis businesses, patients must obtain their medicine on the black market, which leads to an increase in criminal activity and endangers the safety of the patient. With regulated medical cannabis businesses, patients obtain their medicine from a known caregiver and can have safe access to their medicine. Street sales and associated crime decrease. Medical cannabis businesses also decrease crime in the areas in which they are located because of the security and surveillance measures employed by the businesses and because patients and operators are vigilant and report any criminal activity to the police.

Medical cannabis is good for the economy

Cannabis is the basis of the original "green" economy. Medical cannabis businesses can revitalize local economies by providing green jobs, bringing more customers to local businesses, and increasing sales tax revenue. The best way for a community to benefit from legal medical cannabis is to encourage medical cannabis businesses to develop and expand in the areas. There is a large demand in all Colorado communities for cannabis as a safe alternative to dangerous and addictive artificial drugs. Local governments should find a way to capitalize on the demand to improve their local economies. Special medical cannabis districts or research parks are one way to encourage "cannabusinesses" to develop in your area.
